The Alzheimer's Drug Discovery Foundation (ADDF) is the only public charity whose sole mission is to accelerate the discovery and development of drugs to prevent, treat and cure Alzheimer's disease, related dementias and cognitive aging.

Founded in 1998 by the Lauder family, the ADDF awards grants to leading scientists conducting breakthrough drug discovery and early clinical research. We use a venture philanthropy model to bridge the worldwide funding gap between basic research and later-stage drug development, using any return on investment to support new research.

Because our overhead and administrative costs are covered by a private foundation, 100% of your contribution goes directly to scientific research and programs.

The ADDF has granted more than $45 million to fund over 325 Alzheimer's drug discovery programs and clinical trials in academic centers and biotechnology companies in 17 countries. Scientists funded by the ADDF have tested over 30 new drugs in people with Alzheimer's disease. Subsequent to the ADDF's critical initial funding, our grantees have received commitments of over $2 billion in follow-on funding from government, pharmaceutical companies and venture capital firms to further advance their drug research.
